The Federation and Planet Earth

Earth is perceived as a self-contained site or realm

LEARNING, EXPANSION

Robert.- On which the Federation gives all its members a framework of legal, ethical and moral rules, this common framework applies to all members, but what happens on planet Earth? What frame is used? A different one due to the uniqueness that the Earth has with respect to the other members that are part of the Federation? And if so, why two yardsticks of ethics and morals?

Athena Swaruu X.- For the Federation, the Earth is perfectly within its legal framework. The problem here is that the Federation is not a single block within a single level, but in a staggered manner it increases not only in terms of area, but also in density within the jurisdiction of each of these levels. The rise in existential density causes a change in the perception of its members of what they understand reality to be, and this inevitably brings a change in their ethics, because ethics is irremediably associated with the perfection of the reality and level of consciousness of each person. I mean the level of consciousness of the members that control and compose it for each level.

So, from this more expanded perspective of these higher echelon members, the Earth is perceived as a self-contained site or realm, where people, (call yourselves souls, but it is not that simple), enter at their own risk. They see the purpose of the Earth as a place of learning expansion to control the personal reality of expansion of personal consciousness and of the collective to which those souls belong. And ultimately, it also favours the expansion of the Whole, of the Original Source.

From the almost timeless position of those people in higher or expanded realms, densities and consciousnesses, what happens on Earth during an incarnation of a person-soul that this person sees as suffering over the course of about 80 years, they see it as a simple sigh in time, an enriching experience for all. In the same way that a psychologist on Earth will present to a month-old baby a lit candle and the baby will try to catch the fire by burning it slightly. The psychologist sees it as learning for the baby, since the burn will not be serious, it will pass in minutes, since the baby's spinal-cord reflex will withdraw the little hand before strong damage occurs. This is also used to test how well the baby's nervous system is working according to its stage of development. From those higher densities, an experience of suffering on Earth has the same value: learning, expansion. The value of ethics and morals change strongly with the expansion of consciousness, therefore, what is ethical at one level is not so from another. This is an inescapable fact that Yazhi and I have observed. This means that from a more expanded position of consciousness, many times the means justify the end. In other words, purposely provoking situations or events that on Earth can be seen as unethical, justifies the positive final outcome that these unethical events cause. This is an extremely important point. This point above is very common to see for people who are at a certain level of expansion, since ethics does change according to the level of perception-consciousness of each person. However, another point is that the imposition of an ethical point of view or framework from above on a lower ethical framework, such as that of the Earth, entails, from one point of view or another, that the superior position ignores or demerits the situation or experience of suffering of the person in the lower position, 3D Earth, as if it were not real, when it definitely is.

So, as a more personal comment on my part, from my position, whatever that may be, I do see it as valid that one or another situation, the means, whatever they are, justify the positive ending as long as that positive ending is maximum or of critical importance and is given. But I also see how unfair this can be viewed from the bottom position, as just why it is ignored to begin with.

So, the legal framework for Earth is the same as for the rest of the so-called 5D, with 5D being the average existential density in space between cultures that are having an experience in the so-called physical world. Only that they see the Earth as a contained place where they can guide in detail what happens inside, and that's right, everything is guided and manipulated in detail. That is why it has been explained for a long time that there cannot be a total atomic war or anything like that, because it would end the 3D experience-realm completely. But there may be more or less localized fights or wars at the Second World War level and there may also be extermination agendas against specific populations or against the entire population of the planet.

That is why we say that the Federation ultimately controls everything that happens on Earth, not from a position of evil, but from maintaining the right of the inhabitants within the Earth, but seen from a framework of legal and ethical understanding, different from which humans have from the point of view of being incarnated there.

Robert.- Will the Federation allow humanity to be interstellar?

Athena Swaruu X.- From the Federation's point of view, and as already explained, humans are not a species, they are a bio suit that allows multiple races or species to coexist on Earth with a common experience called human being. The Federation as such does not view humanity as a species or as a race. It is a biological suit accessible in various ways or methods, based on the morphology of the races called the Lyrian group. This is because the Lyrian body is seen as one of the best, most practical and strong designs to survive in the biological environment of the Earth.

So, answering the question directly: it will not allow it, not as humans would wish. The Federation does not have to allow humanity to become interstellar because according to them it already is, and their going out into the cosmos as humans destroys the very purpose of humanity.

Robert.- Can you remind us what it means to be interstellar. I think it is related to some kind of technology and on a par with the consciousness and spirituality of the race in question. Thanks.

Athena Swaruu X.- Interstellar: a civilization capable of moving from its place of origin to any other point outside its own solar system, otherwise it would only be interplanetary. That he has enough technology to navigate among the stars and what this brings hand in hand. That he knows multiple cultures of other stars and that he has dealings or agreements with those other cultures.
